THE RAYMOND LION

Of all the eight sentiments set forth in the Lions Code of Ethics, none goes more directly to the heart of the matter than—8. "To be careful with my criticisms and liberal with my praise; to build up and not destroy." There are two forms of criticism, destructive and constructive. The one condemns, tears down, destroys, leaves only desolation where once was a structure—faulty, perhaps, but serving some good purpose. The other encourages, points out the better way, leads to building up, improving and advancing to nobler things.

This pledge, taken by every Lion, will lead him to pattern more and more closely after Him who, almost two thousand years ago, taught service, charity and humility to men. When the woman taken in sin, was brought before the Master for sentence, He agreed that under the strict letter of the law she should be stoned to death. But He stipulated that the first stone be thrown by one who was himself without sin. Then her prosecutors sneaked away. Finally looking up from the writing in the sand which occupied Him, He asked: "Where are those thine accusers? Hath no man condemned thee?"

And when she replied that none had He said: "Neither do I condemn thee. Go, and sin no more."

There was constructive criticism of the kind which the Lions seek to follow. He did not call harsh names, nor seek to ostracize the woman, nor bar her from attending service at the temple, nor do any of the things that so many of His professed followers have done. He was careful with His criticism. He made it constructive, not destructive. He did not say that the woman was blameless, but He pointed out the way to better things—"Go, and sin no more."

There is enough error and wrong doing in the world to furnish endless ground for denunciation, complaint or fault-finding, if the Lions but devoted themselves to it. The Lions pledge to leave that to others.

There is also enough that is good and honest and praiseworthy in every human endeavor to furnish endless ground for approval and encouragement and support. The Lions pledge themselves to voice their praise for the good in whatever is, and their help in all good works.

The things which are not desirable are to be supplanted by good things, suggested in a constructive way; and the things which are most desirable are to be encouraged by liberal praise and by substantial aid and moral support.

With every Lions Club and every individual working to that end; with all their cumulative influences working to build up and not to tear down; to substitute good for evil instead of merely railing at evil; to teach fair and honest business methods instead of lamenting that some are not honest—who can doubt that the standard of citizenship will be steadily raised in every country where Lionism has a foothold?

And that is the ultimate purpose of Lionism—to make better citizens.

I REMEMBER

Mr. A. Dilworth Woolley came to Canada the first time in 1892. As I remember it, he came with a shipment of his father's cattle which Charles McCarthy brought into Alberta. Mr. Woolley returned to Grantsville, his birthplace and assisted his father, Samuel Woolley who was a large cattle and sheep owner, also owned a large number of horses and a ranch north of the Town of Grantsville.

On May 11th 1899 Dilworth left Salt Lake City for a mission to the Eastern States for the LDS Church. He was one of the first Elders to return to the Hill Cumorah after the Saints journeyed West.

On his return from the mission field he became employed in the Real Estate office of his brother-in-law the late John W. Taylor who was at that time promoting the sale of land in Alberta, and of course, he received a great deal of encouragement to go to Canada to purchase land and get a start in life.

In the year 1904 or 1905 he came to Alberta and settled at Raymond, where he purchased a lot on the corner of 3rd East and 2nd North; the closest lot to the centre of town at that time that he could buy as much of the centre of town was reserved for business. He built one of the first houses in Raymond on that lot, a small two roomed lean-to. As he was employed by the Knight Sugar Co. herding cattle, it was a place where he could go and call home when he came in from the range. His brother-in-law Arthur Burritt and wife lived in that house during their stay in Canada.

Mr. Woolley was a member of the first High Council in the Taylor Stake.

He bought the farm now owned by Don Wilde where the Welling Station and grain elevators are located. After making a few payments on the land Horace Welling, after whom Welling was named, wanted that farm so Mr. Woolley let him take over his contract, then bought a half section one and one half miles south. He later added to his holdings there, and the farm is still listed in his name as owned by his wife.

On March 3rd 1909 he was married to Hattie Schenfeld in the Salt Lake Temple and came back to Canada in April 1909 to make his home, residing in Raymond until the spring of 1938 when the family moved to the farm.

Three children were born to Mr. and Mrs. Woolley; Glen, Arla and Wayne.

Mr. Woolley was employed by King Bros. General Merchants, for seven years. Their place of business was located South of the old building of the Bank of Montreal.

Wayne's health broke when eleven years old, therefore he availed himself of a University education. He attended the University of Alberta

The Neighborhood Club met last week at the home of Mrs. Aziel Stevenson where they quilted two quilts.

Mr. and Mrs. Keith Grey and son Tommy of Norwalk, California are visiting at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Smith. Mrs. Grey is the former Miss Helen Smith.

2nd Spraying For Fly Control Completed

The second operation of the Fly Control Program has just been completed here by the spraying outfit from Lethbridge under the direction of M. L. Friend. The Health Department of Lethbridge have worked in close co-operation with our local Department in this matter but to make a real success of this requires the full co-operation of every household in Raymond.

Sanitation is a must in Fly Control and one big step in this direction is the careful disposal of garbage. The Health Department recommends that all garbage be wrapped and kept in fly-tight and water-tight containers. If possible all dry garbage should be burned—dry garbage may consist of potato peelings etc, wrapped in lots of newspaper. The common garbage heap is one of the major breeding place of our common enemy, the house fly, so do your part and do away with the fly.

It is also the duty of all citizens to screen their windows and doors and paint the screens with Household DDT. This forms a protection against the fly—and that is good.

Mr. and Mrs. Don Steed (nee Olive Brandley) of Cardston announce the birth of a baby daughter on August 6th.

Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Hawk had as their guests on Sunday Mr. and Mrs. Jack Pittaway of Taber and Mrs. Ina Tiffen of Lethbridge.

Mr. and Mrs. Chuck Ackroyd returned on Sunday from an enjoyable week's vacation in Waterton.

Accent on Savings

Plain, old-fashioned saving—putting money in the bank against a rainy day—is a virtue at any time, but right now it has a very important added value.

Saving in times of inflation (a nice trick if you can do it) is much more than an admirable habit; it can be a powerful weapon against the problem every Canadian faces today.

Actually, it can be done.

Strapped as we are by rising prices, the hard fact of the matter is—or so economists keep telling us—that we still have more money to spend than goods to spend it on.

If this is the case, the obvious answer would seem to be one of two things: We have a choice of either cutting down on our spending—in other words, saving more—or of producing more goods. Or, better still, a bit of both.

Some people prefer to seek a solution in price controls. The government already has the authority to institute controls if and as soon as it sees fit. But as we see it, the trouble with price controls is that they add nothing to what people can buy and take nothing away from what they have to spend.

Controls also hold some prices below their natural levels and thus leave extra purchasing power free to compete for other goods. The only way to really reduce the pressure on prices is to put the surplus purchasing power that already exists into savings.

Inflation is making our currency look more and more anaemic. It needs a transfusion, and the best way of performing the operation would be to combine greater production with increased savings.

And, to borrow an educational slogan from one of our chartered banks: Saving doesn't cost—it pays!

Going My Way

By Dorothy Garbutt

We would appreciate hearing any comments on the desirability of including the following column in our paper. If we hear of enough people who would like to see it as a regular feature we will make arrangements.

It was exactly like an illustration in Good Housekeeping. As neat and as sanitary, as up to date both in color scheme and equipment as any thing man could devise, and woman order. The entire home was a model dwelling—I mean the house was a model dwelling.

Broadloom carpets covered the floors clear to the baseboards, old furniture had been re-covered and new pieces were very new indeed. Candles with unlighted wicks stood guard over freshly picked garden flowers, and whether the candles were bought to match the flowers, or the blossoms cultivated to go agreeably with the candles, I can't tell. But it was all very tasteful and elegant.

But the very core of the house was the kitchen, and you could tell by the prideful expression on the housewife's face just what it meant to her. She apologized even while showing it to us, apologized because we had caught her unawares with her ironing board down. And because the ironing board was in use, the scarlet enamelled table and chairs weren't in their usual place, and so, in her eyes the place was in confusion. One thing out of place, and its a mess yet!

The sparkling yellow painted walls were lined with gleaming white cupboards. The electric stove was so artfully camouflaged amongst the yellow bakelite counters and chromium gadgets that it was scarcely to be found.

Portable shelves held brightly polished electric equipment, so clean and so shining they looked as though they had never been used.

And over the sink was a very large mirror so arranged that it was opposite the only window in the kitchen and by standing with your back to this window you could look away down the leafy avenue on which the house stood. A tricky idea and a nice one.

But, to tell the truth, the kitchen dismayed me. The old adage from McGuffey's Reader about a place for everything, and everything in its place may be alright on paper, but like authors—the dickens to live with.

I looked around and couldn't see a pin cushion, without which a kitchen simply isn't a kitchen for me. The electric toaster had no crumbs of toast on it—in fact, I doubt if they ever use it to make toast, for fear of marking it. I wonder if they ever sit down at night and make toast and tea, and talk and talk and talk.

And another thing, there was no calendar in sight. No gaudy pictures of cows in the meadow, children on swings, or old folks dozing by a rose-covered cottage door. There were a few plants in the window, I grant you—but they were exotic vine-like affairs, very conscious of their rarity. Of the friendly geranium—not a leaf.

I admired her kitchen, for it seemed the only polite thing to do. But I didn't warm to it. To me, a kitchen should be like the one in which the small boy and his granny were sitting. The kettle was boiling softly, the geraniums were bright with blossoms in the window, a cat purred on the braided rug. All was cosy and comfortable, and as it should be. Granny rocked back and forth, her knitting needles flying. "Granny," said the boy, "why are you knitting?" And Granny replied, "Just for the hell of it, sonny, just for the hell of it!"

Mulching With Corn Cobs

Mulching is to cover the soil with some protective material. A good mulch will conserve surface; protect plants from winter injury; prevent the soil surface from forming a hard, impervious top; and keep down weeds. Corn cobs have been found to meet all these requirements. Although originally intended for greenhouse use only, outdoor gardeners have found this material useful for their work also.

As a mulching material, corn cobs actually compare more than just favorably with standard materials. Corn cobs have been used to improve the structure of greenhouse soils. This particularly so in the case of soils packed down by frequent overhead watering. Just how this is done is not yet known but it is thought the sugar in the cobs (6 per cent) is leached into the soil where it stimulates micro-organism activity, which in turn granulates the soil.

For general greenhouse and garden use, says Dr. A. P. Chan of the Horticulture Division, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, the corn cobs should be broken up into particles. It is not advisable to mulch to a depth exceeding three inches as this tends to encourage disease. After the material has been used as a mulch, it may be dug into the soil as it is an excellent source of organic matter.

When used to protect plants from winter injury, cobs may be mounded over the plants or a wire mesh cylinder may be set over the plants and filled with crushed corn cobs.

Preserving A Husband

Be careful in your selection. Do not choose too young and take only such as have been reared in a good moral atmosphere. Some insist on keeping them in a pickle, while others keep them in hot water. This only makes them sour, hard and sometimes bitter. Even poor varieties may be made sweet, tender and good by garnishing them with patience, well sweetened with smiles and flavored with kisses to taste. Then wrap them in a mantle of charity, keep warm with a steady fire of domestic devotion and serve with peaches and cream. When thus prepared they will keep for years.

Good Grooming FOR MEN by Ralph Edwards

PERSONAL PREFERENCE

Learn early in life what colors suit you best and stick to them regardless of personal preference. Most men will find in the four colors available that two of them suit them best. Usually the two cold colors of grey and blue go together and the two warm colors of brown and green. Where personal preference really enters into clothing purchases is in the types of fabrics and styling.

Fabrics break down in two basic types with variations in each. The first is worsteds. These are the refined or more finely processed opposite of tweeds which are coarser materials.

Here's the fabric formula for suits. Fine fabrics for dress, coarse ones for sport. In this there is a deviation in that business clothes fall into the centre and may be coarse or fine. However, err on the side of fineness when choosing business suits. If you like the ruggedness of tweeds, then choose a fine tweed or closely woven one for business. Leave the colorful, heavy ones for sportswear.

In fine worsteds or fine fabrics there are two variations. One is the hard finish and the other the soft or milled finish. As the name implies the appearance of the hard fabric is crisp and lends itself to dressiness. The milled finish is essentially the same fabric except that the surface is roughened and therefore has a nap. It too, is dressy, but presents a softer, less crisp appearance. Both hard and soft finish fabrics are used for dress up wear and business.

Personal preference allows variations in choice of fabrics. As a result, some men wear fabrics considered entirely incorrect for specific occasions but because they have established a certain character, can be excused. These are the men who wear tweeds everywhere — and get away with it.

IT IS REALLY GREAT

Although Lou Snider's years in radio and show business as pianist, organist and arranger add up to the impressive total of twenty-two, he is only thirty-two. From the CBC's Toronto studios his keyboard antics and background music are heard regularly in such network programs as the Happy Gang, National Radio Forum and Peggy and Lou.
